“I feel extremely happy to have attended the Tiffin meeting in Kashi. We all have seen the changing picture of India in the past nine years. The image of India before and after 2014 is before us. Earlier, there were big protest movements going on inside the country and anger, resentment and mistrust prevailed among people towards the government. Every day, a new corruption case came to the fore and internal and external security was under threat,” said Yogi, adding that in the past nine years people have seen India changing.

“Recently, we witnessed the PM’s six-day foreign visit which showed us the growing power of India. You all saw how India’s prestige has increased in other countries,” said Yogi, adding, “If today’s India knows how to maintain friendship, it also knows how to give a befitting reply to an enemy.”

Lauding the achievements of the PM, he said India is the fifth largest economy of the world and will become the third largest economy in the next two-three years.
