Lucknow: Deputy chief minister Brajesh Pathak urged experts in the field of information and technology to conduct research, for which the government will extend full support.

Addressing the international conference 'Digi-Gov-23': Digital governance through the Internet of Things (IoT) held on Saturday, he said, "Internet has become a necessity and the device attached to it creates an environment where things are getting automated. More research should be conducted in the field and we are ready to give all support to the researchers."

Sharing technological developments in the state he said that Samsung has established the biggest chip manufacturing factory in Noida. He appreciated the efforts of the Computer Society of India in organizing such events which share knowledge with the people.
