This could help in lateral movement of labour. Every country of G20 can share input on an online platform. In that way, lateral hiring will become reality and the world will become one market. Anybody sitting in Ireland can hire in India and vice versa to source out manpower as per requirement.

However, the delegates believed that it's complicated. So, we mooted to at least create a roadmap. We are not talking about framework but a roadmap where experience can be shared. One can take inspiration from 27 countries of the European Union," said Kumar.

The delegates agreed on having a roadmap. Now, India will further discuss the idea in the next meeting which is scheduled in Pune in April and further in Hyderabad in June and Bengaluru in August.

Meanwhile, Alkesh Kumar Sharma, secretary, MeitY, said, "Delegates who participated in DEWG were thrilled and lauded Lucknow as well the state for the hospitality, rich culture, food and smiling nature."

"The takeaway from the three-day meet was to build digital public infrastructure, cyber security in the digital economy and digital skilling," he added.
