

Auto component makers to double investments as global supply chains shift from China to India

While the talk of India's potential as a global hub for auto parts has been around for nearly a decade, the country's component OEMs have only begun walking this talk in the last two-three years, post Covid19. As supply chains get rewired, India's auto component manufacturers are sitting at larger than ever export orders and creating new capacities to fulfil increasing global demand.
